Nikko, Japan

Following from Shanghai, Chang, envoy for Japan, arrived at Kiao on the 29th. The Cantonese oppose his going and post up notices in the guilds declaring it a disgrace for China to proceed before the audacious wien. A letter telegram says well informed Chinese assert that Kiang-Chang is at last relieved from office as Vicerey of Chili by An-Chung, late Vicerey of Kiang and that the latter and Kiu-Chang oppose Chinese going for peace so that perhaps envoy may not proceed beyond Shanghai.

Regarding full powers of Chinese Plenipotentiaries.

The United States Minister to China replied that the above powers do not extend to Japan. The Minister of Foreign Affairs of China stated that he cannot take the responsibility of constraining the meaning of their letter of credentials. He also stated that the words "Plenipotentiaries with full powers etc." appear in their credentials and if there are any qualifications to the usually accepted meaning of these words, it can only be decided upon the arrival of the Plenipotentiaries in Japan.

I immediately and inform him and heard from a reliable source of a second document that in spite of understanding originally arrived at Chinese plenipotentiaries do not bring full powers with them. If such a fact even if they should arrive here Japanese government would naturally dictate to negotiate with them. Ask therefore in a telegraph and ascertain whether they bring full powers or not. You may inform him confidentially that you heard the above report from No. 4. 9:56, 1944.

In reply to my telegram of the 19th instant, relative to the powers given to the Chinese Plenipotentiaries, I have received a reply by Shingo from the Secretary of the diplomatic legation in the name of the Chinese government, stating that the words "plenipotentiaries with full powers" appear in their credentials and, if there are any qualifications to the words, they are not stipulated in the usual diplomatic form. Therefore, the arrival of the Chinese Plenipotentiaries in Japan can only be regarded as an expression of their credentials as such.
