

1457

外機整

大臣之

次官

委員加藤

東亞局長

263

昭和

五五五五五
七八七九七
九三六九三
一四七
一五

本署 八月十八日發

野村大佐

野村大佐
第七〇八號(館長符號)

STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL

Reference is made to the question which the Japanese Ambassador raised on August 8 during a conversation with the Secretary of State whether it might not be possible for the responsible heads of the Japanese Government and the Government of the United States to meet with a view to discussing means whereby an adjustment in relations between the United States and Japan might be brought about. The thought of Palace forces and of the Japanese Government in offering

外務省

264

1457

This suggestion is appropriate.
 Reference is made also to the desire expressed by the Japanese Ambassador during a call on the Secretary of State on August 19th that there be resumed the informal conversations which had been in progress between the two Governments toward establishing a basis there existed a basis for negotiations relative to a peaceful settlement covering the entire Pacific situation.

外務省

0 535 246

大正

九月

十九日

東京

外務省

大正十九年九月十九日
 東京
 外務省 大正十九年九月十九日
 東京 外務省

246 882 0

...can the Japanese Ambassador brought up these negotiations, the secretary of state declined the Ambassador that the Government of the United States had shown great patience and had been prepared to continue in that course of action so long as the Japanese Government maintained a positive to follow course of peace. It was pointed out to the Ambassador that still in speaking along this course this Government had received reports indicating already that the Japanese Government was adopting course directly the opposite of those on which the recent arrangements between the Ambassador and the Secretary of State had been predicated. It was pointed out also that the Japanese press was being continually stimulated to speak of involvement of Japan by the United States and was being officially

...the Japanese Ambassador brought up these negotiations, the secretary of state declined the Ambassador that the Government of the United States had shown great patience and had been prepared to continue in that course of action so long as the Japanese Government maintained a positive to follow course of peace. It was pointed out to the Ambassador that still in speaking along this course this Government had received reports indicating already that the Japanese Government was adopting course directly the opposite of those on which the recent arrangements between the Ambassador and the Secretary of State had been predicated. It was pointed out also that the Japanese press was being continually stimulated to speak of involvement of Japan by the United States and was being officially insisted in ways unimpaired to influence public opinion. The secretary of state made it clear that he did not see how conversations between the two governments could usefully be pursued or proposals be dismissed while Japanese official spokesmen and the Japanese press contended that the United States was endeavoring to encroach upon Japan and carried on a campaign against the United States. On two occasions officers of the department of State, pursuant to instructions from the Secretary of State, called on the Japanese Ambassador to indicate concern over the reports that Japan intended to acquire by force or threat of force military and naval bases in Formosa or Indo-China. Subsequently, on July 21 and July 23 the acting secretary of state talked with the Japanese Minister and with the Japanese Ambassador.

over the question of Japan's intentions with regard to French Indochina and pointed out that the Government of the United States could only assume that the occupation by Japan of French Indochina or the acquisition of military and naval bases in that area constituted notice to the United States that Japan had taken by forceful means a step preparatory to making on further movements of conquest in the South Pacific area. The acting secretary pointed out further that this new move on Japan's part was prejudicial to the procurement by the United States of essential raw materials and to the peace of the Pacific, including the Philippines Islands.

外務省

The Government of the United States... had no alternative but to inform the Japanese Ambassador that, in the opinion of this Government, the measures then being taken by the Japanese Government had served to remove the basis for further conversations relative to a peaceful settlement in the Pacific area.

Informal discussions between the Japanese Government and the Government of the United States directed toward ascertaining whether there exists a basis for negotiations relative to a peaceful settlement covering the entire Pacific situation would naturally envisage the working out of program attainable by peaceful methods. It goes without saying that no proposals or suggestions affecting the rights and privileges of either the United States or Japan would be considered except as the right being conformally with the basic principle to which the United States has long been committed.

The Government of the United States... had no alternative but to inform the Japanese Ambassador that, in the opinion of this Government, the measures then being taken by the Japanese Government had served to remove the basis for further conversations relative to a peaceful settlement in the Pacific area.

外 務 省

The program envisaged in such informal discussions would involve the application in the entire Pacific area of the principle of equality of commercial opportunity and treatment. It would thus make possible access by all countries to raw materials and to all other essential commodities. Such a program would envisage cooperation by all nations of the Pacific on a voluntary and peaceful basis toward utilizing all available resources of capital, technical skill, and progressive economic leadership for the purpose of building up not only their own economic but also the economies of regions where productive capacity can be improved. The main would be to increase the purchasing power of the nations and peoples concerned, to raise standards of living, and to create conditions conducive to the maintenance of peace.

If such a program based upon reasonable and constructive principles were to be adopted for the Pacific and if thereafter any of the countries or areas within the Pacific were menaced, the policy of aiding nations resisting aggression would continue to be followed by this Government and this Government would cooperate with other nations in extending assistance of any country threatened.

economic but also the economies of regions where productive capacity can be improved. The main would be to increase the purchasing power of the nations and peoples concerned, to raise standards of living, and to create conditions conducive to the maintenance of peace.

If such a program based upon reasonable and constructive principles were to be adopted for the Pacific and if thereafter any of the countries or areas within the Pacific were menaced, the policy of aiding nations resisting aggression would continue to be followed by this Government and this Government would cooperate with other nations in extending assistance of any country threatened.

外務省

of the Government of the United States, attain all the objectives which Japan affirms that it is seeking. This program would not enable any country to intend its military or political control over other peoples or to obtain economic rights of a definitely monopolistic or preferential character.

外務省

...

If the Japanese Government is seeking what it affirms to be its objectives, the Government of the United States feels the program above outlined is one that can be counted upon to assure Japan satisfaction of its economic needs and legitimate aspirations with much greater certainty than could any other program.

In case the Japanese Government feels that Japan desires and

In those cases where the production and distribution of essential commodities are vested in monopolies, the Government of the United States would expect to use its influence to see that all countries are given a fair share of the distribution of the products of such monopolies and at a fair price.

is in position to suspend its espionage activities, to readjust its position, and to embark upon a general program for the Pacific along the lines of the program and principles to which the United States is committed, the Government of the United States would be prepared to consider resumption of the informal exploratory discussions which were interrupted in July and would be glad to endeavor to arrange a suitable time and place to exchange views.

The Government of the United States, however, feels that, in view of the circumstances attending the interruption of the informal conversations between the two Governments, it would be helpful to both Governments, before undertaking a resumption of such conversations.

actions or proceeding with plans for a meeting. In the Japanese Government would be so good as to furnish a clearer statement that as yet been furnished as to its present attitude and plans, just as this Government has repeatedly outlined to the Japanese Government its attitude and plans. (ompi)

...the Japanese Government would be so good as to furnish a clearer statement that as yet been furnished as to its present attitude and plans, just as this Government has repeatedly outlined to the Japanese Government its attitude and plans. (ompi)

